

BODY IS NOT THAT OF CRIPPEN'S WIFE

Declaration of Defense Made in Celebrated Trial Today.

EVEN SEX IS NOT PROVEN

London Believes Prosecution Unmade What Was Considered Strong Case Against Dr. Hawley Crippen—Dr. A. A. Tobin Opens for Defense.

United Press Telegram. LONDON, Oct. 20.—Dr. Hawley Crippen pleaded his first ray of hope with the close of the prosecution here today in his trial for the murder of his actress wife, and the general effect prevailed in London that the prosecution was closed this morning and that the defense had opened for the defense.

He opened upon the court the declaration that the body had not been identified, even its sex remained in doubt. His contention was that there was no proof to show that the body was not that of Dr. Crippen's wife. Dr. Crippen took the stand in his own behalf this afternoon.

Special to The Courier. SCOTSDALE, Oct. 20.—While climbing down off a wagon loaded with two tons of flour at the City Feed Store yesterday afternoon Ben Trump, aged five years, had his left foot caught under the wheel. His toes were crushed between the wheel and the brick pavement and three of them had to be amputated at the ends by Drs. J. P. Strickler and S. H. Gray. YOUNG GIRL WHO SHOT SELF BEGS TO SEE HER SWEETHEART.

Hospital Physicians Place Mary Hosfelt Under Roetgen Rays in Effort to Discover Bullet's Lodging Place.

JEALOUSY CAUSES RASH ACT. Her Condition Is Serious and Recovery in Doubt—Lloyd Stillwagon, Girl's Placer, Early Caller at Hospital, But Admittance Refused.

With a self-inflicted bullet in her body, her temperature at 120 and a bare chance to live, pretty, brown-haired, dark-eyed Mary Hosfelt, of No. 100 East Gibson avenue, lay in the Cottage State hospital today, mourning for her sweetheart, Lloyd Stillwagon, a bachelor, to whom she is engaged to wed.

Physicians regard her condition as critical and hope her recovery may be secured during the day in an effort to discover the location of the bullet. It entered the right breast, penetrating the ribs and then taking a downward course. If the bullet had entered the left breast, it would have pierced the heart and death been instantaneous.

The girl, who is 19 years old, met her sweetheart, Stillwagon, by appointment near the corner of Eighth street and Gibson avenue, early last evening. She was in a dependent mood of jealousy, but the pair, it is said, had not been quarreling. As he said to leave her, saying "goodbye, little girl," she stepped, smiling, saying, "I'm going to end it now."

Swiftly taking a revolver, 32 caliber, from her stocking, she fired, killing and wounded him in time to catch the falling woman. The ambulance was called and her fiancé made the race with her to the hospital. There she clung to him until her hold was loosened by the attendants there.

She was in such an acute stage of nervousness last night, calling at intervals for Stillwagon, that a probe for the bullet was practically impossible. "I did it," she declared to the nurses. Today she repeated the statement that she had attempted to take her own life, but indicated her regret and expressed a wish that she might live.

Stillwagon was an early caller at the hospital this morning, but was refused admittance, and there was only one person, outside of the physicians and nurses, permitted to see her today. She asked for a minister to whom she talked for a few moments. He declined to disclose the nature of this conversation.

During the night her father, Michael Hosfelt, and other members of the family, were at the hospital. While the bullet ranged downward, it did not seem to have entered the abdominal cavity, nor is there any indication that it struck the kidneys. There was also little bleeding. Her temperature was at 120 early today and the physicians fear the chances are against her. The result of the Roetgen rays will determine the further course of the physician. Stillwagon, who is divorced from a (Continued on Sixth Page.)

DAVID B. HILL IS DEAD IN NEW YORK.

Former United States Senator and Leading Democrat of Country.

THREE TIMES WAS GOVERNOR

Complications Resulted From Cold Contracted Two Weeks Ago and Sudden Turn For Worst Came Last Night—Only Nurse Was Present.

United Press Telegram. ALBANY, N. Y., Oct. 20.—Former United States Senator David Bennett Hill died at his residence at Woodford's Point this morning. He had been ill for three weeks from complications resulting from a cold. A sudden change came in his condition last night. The nurse was present at the time of his death.

details of the United States. He was always a potent factor in the councils of his party in New York State. Three times he was Governor, served one term in the United States Senate and in 1892 was one of the most formidable candidates for the Presidential nomination.

He was born in Havana, N. Y., August 29, 1831. He studied law in Kentucky, was admitted to the bar in 1854 and rapidly rose to the head of his profession. He became active in politics, in which he was successful. In 1870-71 he was a member of the State Assembly and in 1877 and 1881 he presided over the Democratic State conventions. In 1882 he was elected Mayor of Albany and the same year became Lieutenant Governor. In 1885, when Grover Cleveland became President, Hill ascended to the Governor's chair and was twice afterwards re-elected. He served until 1892 when he was elected to the United States Senate.

In the Senate Hill became a national character. He opposed many of President Cleveland's policies. He bitterly fought the income tax provision of the Wilson tariff bill. In 1892 he was candidate for the Democratic Presidential nomination, but was defeated.

It was in 1896 that Hill led the gold standard forces in the convention which nominated Bryan and went for 16 to 1. In the same year he was defeated for Governor by Levi P. Morton. In 1902 he dominated the Democratic party in New York State and up to a few years ago was one of the big leaders of the party.

JOSEPH ASSAD FELL FOR PHONY BILL.

Accepted Mike Estenes' Poor Imitation of $20 Paper Money.

MIKE IS HELD FOR COURT

He Wrote the Bill on Wrapping Paper and Put More Than $20 Time on It, Judging From Appearance—is Held For Court.

Special to The Courier. UNIONTOWN, Oct. 20.—Joseph Assad of Brownsville, is the prosecutor of Mike Estenes, a foreigner charged with obtaining goods with counterfeit money. The information was returned to court this morning by Squire Clark T. Baldwin.

On October 11th, the defendant entered deponent's store in the North Bend, bought a pair of pants and tendered a counterfeit $20 bill in payment, receiving $18 in change. He was later arrested by Constable S. P. Murray and at the hearing on October 12th was held for court. The counterfeit note is attached to the information as evidence. It is a very poor piece of work, being drawn on a piece of common wrapping paper with pen and ink. A bluish colored ink was used for the black, while a red and orange color were substituted for the yellowish color on a $20 bill. The man who made the bill must have spent hours on the work, and certainly earned the $20 he expected to get for his efforts. However, the drawing is so crude that it is a wonder it was ever accepted.

Is Rivalled by Human Hair Where Dandruff is Eradicated.
Seal skin is admired the world over for its softness and glossiness, and yet the human hair is equally as soft and glossy when healthy; and the radical cause of all hair trouble is dandruff, which is caused by a parasitic parasite that saps the vitality of the hair at its root. WESTERN MARYLAND
COAL DEVELOPMENTS.

The announcement that the Western Maryland will develop some valuable coal territory between Conneltsville and Confluence, on the left bank of the Confluence, is true in a limited sense. There are some valuable veins outcropping on the river, but they are neither so extensive nor so valuable as others which the new railroad can and will probably develop.

The Western Maryland will, for example, be in position to develop the Wharton township coal field, and some coal territory south of it, all of which coal lands are said to be good coal propositions.

The Wharton field has been pretty well bought up in spite of the fact that it is utterly without railroad facilities. This fact alone argues confidence in its coal. A poor quality of coal would have remained in the hands of the original owners.

That the Western Maryland will build a branch into the Wharton field just as soon as there seems to be a demand for its development does not admit of argument. The Western Maryland is out for business. It is within easy distance of the Wharton field, which when opened up will furnish a coal and coke tonnage measurably large and lasting.

It may be well, however, for speculators to remember that the Wharton coal will not be opened up on their demand, nor perhaps immediately on any demand save that of actual operation on an extensive scale. The modern railroad management is alive to business, but it demands that the business be actual and not prospective, and that it be reasonably important in volume and permanent in character.

THE RIGHTS AND DUTIES OF GAS AND COAL COMPANIES.

The suit of the Monongahela River Consolidated Coal & Coke Company against the Greenboro Gas Company, to restrain them from boring a gas well through the coal of the complainant in the Lower Conneltsville coke region, will it is hoped throw some further illumination upon a much-disputed and many-sided question.

The subject has been in the courts before, but the courts have not yet clearly defined the rights and duties of gas companies and coal companies when the former desire to pierce the latter's property in order to reach their own.

In general, it is common sense and common law that gas companies shall not be barred from their property by the intervening property of the coal companies, but that the former shall be permitted under proper and reasonable restrictions to develop their gas territory. This much seems to be practically determined. The question hinges upon what reasonable restrictions consist of.

It is well established that the drilling of gas wells through coal mine workings furnishes a new and grave danger to mining. A break in the casing in or near the mine means that the incandescent gas may gather in the workings in sufficient quantities to cause a disastrous explosion. Not only must the property of the minor company be protected against the possibilities of such destruction, but above all else the lives of the miners must be protected.

It is the equitable duty of the gas companies to provide such protection; and it is the lawful duty of the courts, with the assistance of mining experts, to define proper means and measures to render such protection effective.

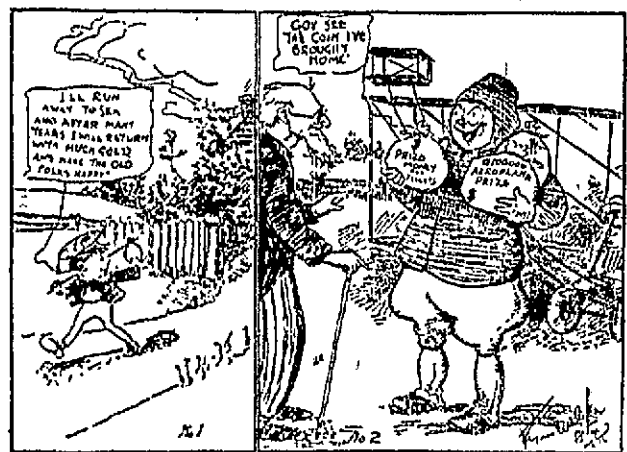

THE ROOT OF EVIL
IN THE SMITH CASE.

"The love of money is the root of all evil," says the Bible and the truthfulness of the statement has been proven millions of times since the world began.

The Smith tragedy adds its testimony to the mountains already piled up. While it was not fairly in evidence the facts warrant the assumption that one of the moving causes of Frank Smith's murder of his father was the information that the latter was about to marry again with the prospect of sensibly diminishing if not wholly divorcing his children's inheritance. If this be correct, the root of Frank Smith's evil deed was money.

The testimony on the trial of the case further showed that Evans Moser, the brother-in-law, imparted the knowledge of Dr. Porter Smith's matrimonial intentions to Frank Smith, and the theory generally accepted was that Frank Smith, wild with remorse for his deed, conceived the notion that Evans Moser, who was normally responsible for it, and in his murderous mood vented bloody vengeance upon Moser. Here again we trace the evil effects of the love of money.

The widow of Evans Moser now comes into court and asks that Frank Smith be required to pay $100,000 damages to herself and children for having departed them of a husband and father "by his willful, felonious and malicious act." If she recovers, it will probably take all Frank Smith's estate, including his share of his father's estate, to liquidate the judgment. This would probably be a just judgment so far as Frank Smith is concerned; but he has a wife who would be an innocent sufferer, and in her case evil would be done.

TIMES HAVE CHANGED.

In olden times the small lad ran away to sea, expecting to return in after years with a treasure trove for his parents. Now he stays right at home and becomes an aviator with great financial reward for himself and family connections.

Whether such an action can be maintained, however, will perhaps prove a nice legal question. The jury which acquitted Frank Smith rendered a verdict that they found him not guilty "by reason of insanity." If he was insane at the time he inflicted this irreparable damage to his sister and her little ones, can he be said to have acted wilfully, feloniously and maliciously? If he was not mentally responsible, was he legally responsible?

THE FOUL FIEND OF JEALOUSY.

The foul fiend of jealousy is responsible for many crimes, and most of them take the form of self-slaughter, or attempts thereat. The tender passion sometimes goes mad, and in its frenzy turns upon its victim.

There is no cure for the disease in materia medica. The only remedies are common sense and confidence. People who love each other, or think they do, should have faith in each other, and if they find their confidence betrayed they should try to remember that a love thus trifled with or trampled upon is unworthily bestowed and does not merit further consideration.

On the other hand, lovers should avoid nursing petty jealousies. They should resist suspicion, not embrace it. They should not expect or demand each other's undivided attention. If they love reasonably, they will love longer and more faithfully.

"Love me little; love me long."

"First," says Champ Clark, Democratic leader, in a recent public address, outlining what the Democrats will do in Congress, "we will reduce the tariff to a revenue basis." In other words, they will pass another Wilson bill. This benevolent "tariff" law almost reduced the Conneltsville coke region to a non-revenue basis. Scarcely 25% of our coke were operated and thousands of workmen were thrown out of employment. Railroad traffic was almost suspended and thousands of trainmen and shippers were without work. The bone and sinew of the region became non-producers. Instead of being a benefit to business they became a burden to the communities in which they lived. The situation involved much privation and suffering. The people of this section never want to see it again. For some of them seem willing, for the sake of a "change," to invite it. It will be a change, but not for the better.

Jesse Hook Wise believes in the publication of campaign expenses before the election. A great many candidates would have to be supplemented by accounts. However, we will expect to see Jesse file his account at 11:35 P. M. on Monday, November 7th.

The December jury crop is being harvested.

South Brownsville is becoming progressive. It wants a new railway station.

Scottdale is building an immense tubercular. Uniontown proposes to erect a 1,000-ton capacity blast furnace. Conneltsville hopes to have a band stand, maybe in the Springtime, Gentle Annie.

Hunters report game scarce. We indicated in the hope that game would be plenty enough to bear the new market and reduce the high cost of living.

Walter Wellman is bragging again. He says he will positively cross the Atlantic in an air ship. He intimates that he has gained knowledge by experience. Perhaps he has, but hard-headed people will wonder why he could not have gained just as much experience by testing the America up and down the coast where it would not have been necessary to have a wrecked it. Wellman seems to have a haughty disdain for experience. One can afford the feeling if somebody else is footing the bill.

The Halloween parade promises to be the biggest thing in town. Let everybody join the parade and wig club and let joy be unconfined.

The Kentucky feudists have broken loose again. The Dark and Moody Ground needs a fresh supply of hemp and a few Cossacks.

A bull is not half so dangerous in a china shop as a child is in a medicine chest.

The Suffragette microbe has made its appearance in Conneltsville, but does not seem to have any danger of an epidemic.

Birds seem to be a favorite game of the County Commissioners just now.

The decision of the Supreme Court to the effect that the State Treasurer's appointment is entitled to hold his office until he is removed by a judicial order under the law, but it contravenes public policy, which is to permit the people to fill an important official vacancy at the first possible convenient opportunity.

"THE LOTTERY MAN"

MR. THEATREGOER!!

Did you ever stop to consider what a New York Theatrical success means?

There are produced in New York annually from 150 to 200 first-class plays—musical and otherwise.

Of these a scant 25% attain a fair degree of success (for a limited length of time they "do business"—then "peter-out" and take to the road).

Ten per cent. of all the plays produced in New York are genuine, indisputable successes. That means the press unreservedly speaks highly of them, and the public—and they after all are the last tribunal—accept them and patronize them over an extended period of time.

Remembering all this—and that New York successes were few and far between last season—because your Metropolitan theatregoer first of all insists upon novelty—abetted by sustained action—love interest and undoubted brightness—the success of Messrs. Sam S. & Lee Shubert's "The Lottery Man" by Rida Johnson Young is scarcely short of remarkable.

The play was produced at a time when successes were as far removed as oases in the desert. It was opening at a theatre that had not boasted a success in an entire season. Yet, it struck that keynote of universal appeal so quickly—so thoroughly—with the naive telling of an entirely novel and human theme; its clean wholesomeness—like a refreshing breeze on a heated day—so captivated its auditors that an engagement of 8 months at the Bijou Theatre, New York, but served to prove how inadequate the capacity of the theatre was.

It is such a play that will interest both youngsters and grown-ups. It will uproot a mood—refresh the jaded—is a veritable grouch-icide.

Seats will be on sale Thursday and after. The prices—25c, 35c, 50c, 75c, $1.00 and $1.50. Date—

RACE TRACK MEN RAISED BIG SUM.

$500,000 to Defeat Adverse Legislation in New York.

PROBERS HEAR STARTLING TALE

Former State Senator Feolker, Testifies to Turning Down Bribe Offer of $50,000 to Vote Against Anti-Race Track Bill.

New York, Oct. 20.—A corruption fund of $500,000 raised in an unusual effort to defeat the passage by the legislature of the anti-race track gambling bill was brought out at the session of the legislature in investigating committee.

Congressman and former State Senator Otto E. Feolker of Brooklyn gave direct testimony of efforts made to bribe him by former State Senator Frank F. Gardner and former Quarantine Commissioner Frank Schroeder (now in Sing Sing).

Robert Elder, first assistant district attorney of Kings county, repeated a story which he testified had been told to him by Frank J. Gardner, to the effect that bookmakers and race horse owners had raised a fund of $500,000 which had been distributed promiscuously where it would do the most good to persons in Albany.

According to Mr. Elder's narration of Gardner's story the anti-race track bill had been passed because Senator Feolker, H. McCarron, the Brooklyn Democratic boss, was plagued that he had not had the exclusive handling of the fund, and to punish those who had thus slighted him he failed to use potent influence he possessed and which, if used, would have defeated the passage of the bill.

Gardner declared in contempt. Frank J. Gardner, who was recently arrested in Scranton, Pa., and indicted on charges connected with the bribery scandal, was declared in contempt for refusing to answer questions.

Feolker, one of the stand, testified that while on the boat coming down from Albany during the session of 1909 Gardner called him in his stateroom and said to him:

"Sit down, Otto. We need your vote against the race track bill. I want to make it worth your while from a financial standpoint. In fact, I will give you $2,500 more than the other senators are getting." He said "they were getting $10,000."

The witness said he refused to consider the offer and the interview ended.

$45,000 Bribe Was Offered.

Soon after Feolker said he received a message to call upon Quarantine Commissioner Schroeder. Schroeder, he testified, said: "You'll better vote against this bill and I'll make it worth your while. I think I can get you $45,000 for your vote."

Witness declined to consider that proposition and Schroeder, he testified, raised the amount which he thought he could get for the vote of the witness to $50,000, but the witness replied to that offer:

"I would not do it if you got a million."

BROKEN GLASS IN SKIN.

Case of Louisville's Woman Puzzles the Doctors.

Louisville, Ky., Oct. 20.—One of the most remarkable cases ever brought to the notice of the local physicians, perhaps, is that of Georgia Brown, whose body appears to be full of broken bits of glass.

More than 200 pieces of "whitish-looking glass have come through her skin on various parts of her body. Her health seems to be excellent but for the wounds caused by the glass coming through her skin.

The woman declares that she has never fallen on any glass and it would be impossible, according to the physicians, to swallow the glass and live more than a few hours.

The pieces of glass taken from her body range from the size of a grain of corn to more than half an inch in diameter.

FOUR STEAMSHIPS MISSING.

May Have Been Lost in Southern Hurricane.

New Orleans, Oct. 20.—Four steamships caught in the hurricane on their way to New Orleans have not been heard from.

They are the Crown Prince, the Sunbeam, the Elmar and the Marietta of Georgia.

Fears for the safety of the Crown Prince are entertained, as the boat was in the very thick of the gulf storm.

The Mercator of the Central American Steamship company has reached.

The storm hit us with hardly any warning," said a member of the crew. "It began just at dusk. Through the night it grew worse and worse. The deck was always at a dangerous slant."

YOUNG GIRL SHOOTS HERSELF.

former wife, has been calling on the Hoofelt girl for about eight months. It is understood that he was to have married the girl in November. While he called upon her frequently at the home, the girl was in the habit of meeting downtown in the early evening. Her jealousy of the man had characterized their entire courtship.

The police took no action in the case, the girl having stated twice, last evening and this morning, that she alone was responsible for the act.

She has brothers in the city who are well known and generally liked. It was from one of these she is said to have stolen the revolver several days ago.

There are two rumors regarding the cause of the girl's act. One that she had seen him with another girl, a young woman who is merely a friend of the Stillwagon family. The other is that some unidentified person had been sending anonymous communications to both the girl and Stillwagon.

Stillwagon was seen this morning, but declined to go into the details of the affair. He seemed overwrought because of the affair and called the hospital by telephone at intervals to learn of her condition.

He spoke of her being a pure and good girl, declaring that she was held in no higher esteem than by himself.

Miss Hoofelt is a fairly well educated girl, her features are refined, weighs 115 pounds, of attractive figure and regarded as a pretty woman.

Stillwagon is said to have been her first sweetheart and her attachment for him was unusually strong and even pathetic.

At 2 o'clock this afternoon the physicians had not concluded the X-ray examination, but Miss Hoofelt was resting under. She was permitted to see Stillwagon at noon.

Special Train Takes Fans to Chicago Game

A special train over the Baltimore & Ohio railroad, running as a second section to No. 5, passed through Connelville, last evening filled with a large party of vociferously enthusiastic Philadelphia fans. They were on their way to Chicago, where the third game of the World's series begins this afternoon.

Flushed with success over the Cubs in the first two games, the Philadelphians expect to see the feat duplicated in the Windy City. Most of them made the trip on the coin dropped by Cub rooters who blew into Philadelphia early in the week and proceeded to bet their bank notes.

Railroad men with passenger runs out of Chicago say none of the bulletin boards posted the result of the seventh game Tuesday when the Athletics made six runs. Brokers who get the word by ticker spread the news to the crowds in front of the newspaper offices.

Gotlip Bloom
Dies Suddenly
at His Home

While sitting in a chair on the porch of his home at Crossland station, Gotlip Bloom, aged 68 years, died suddenly shortly after 7 o'clock this morning. Mr. Bloom arose at his usual hour this morning and after eating a hearty breakfast went out on the porch to enjoy his usual morning smoke. He was taken suddenly ill and died in a half hour. Acute indigestion is supposed to have been the cause.

Mr. Bloom was born in Germany and has resided on a small farm at Crossland station for about 8 years. He was twice married. His first wife died a number of years ago. He is survived by his widow and a large family of children. No arrangements have as yet been made for the funeral.

RETURNED THE PICK.

But Paul Griglack is Arrested, Case Then Settled.

Paul Griglack of Trotter was given a hearing this morning before Judge P. M. Buttermore of the West Side, on a charge of stealing a pick. The information was made by Nicola Dattre, an Italian who also resides at Trotter. Both men are employed in the Trotter mines and the prosecutor alleged that the pick was stolen by Griglack October 7. The defendant, who is blind of one eye, stated that he took the pick by mistake and returned it to the prosecutor with apologies.

Griglack has worked at Trotter for about 12 years and this is the first time he was ever before a judge as a defendant in a case. After hearing the testimony of both men the case was settled by the defendant and prosecutor paying half the costs. The arrest was made by Constable William Roland.

FAILURE DUE TO EQUILIBRATOR.

Wellman Says Balloon Was in Good Shape When Abandoned.

VOYAGERS BACK IN NEW YORK

Not Until a New Equilibrator Is Invented Will Darling Aeronaut Make Another Attempt to Cross Ocean, If At All.

New York, Oct. 20.—Walter Wellman and his five companions who were rescued at sea from the dirigible balloon America by the steamship Trent, Captain Charles E. Down, about 375 miles east of Norfolk early this morning while attempting to fly from Atlantic City to Europe, reached New York aboard the Trent.

Mr. Wellman, still wearing his khaki aviation clothes which he had on when sailing from Atlantic City last Saturday morning, showed no ill effect of the voyage nor did his companions.

Balloon in Perfect Shape. Mr. Wellman surprised his interviewers by stating that the dirigible had met with no serious engine troubles and that the escape of gas from the bag was negligible. In the foreign statements received here just after the rescue Mr. Wellman was quoted as saying that the dirigible had met with mishaps so serious that the balloon when sighted by the Trent could have remained above the sea only a few hours longer and that her machinery had gone awry.

"The airship when we abandoned her," said Wellman, "was practically in as good condition as when we started from Atlantic City."

"Then why was the trip given up?" Equilibrator to Blame.

"The equilibrator was our great trouble," Wellman explained. "Before starting out on this balloon voyage we were of the opinion that no dirigible could reach Europe without an equilibrator. Now we know that a dirigible cannot get there with an equilibrator."

"The trailing tail held the balloon back and at times pulled it down toward the water and we had to ballast ship at the cost of a loss of gasoline dropped to the waves."

"Try again? Well, something better than our equilibrator will have to be invented. Until it is I cannot answer definitely when I shall make another trial, if at all."

Jack Irwin's Story. Jack Irwin, the wireless operator on the America, then recited his story:

"We were all as happy as six little boys," Irwin began, "but when the Trent hoisted us and got our distress signals, believe me or not, she just looked up like the Singer building."

"Nobody felt any fear, even when things were going their worst," Irwin continued. "We quit all right, but we quit only because we were running out of gasoline. The equilibrator, holding us back like a brake, made us throw out the gasoline."

"We were over our heads in a thick fog as I went to see and a good deal thicker, but we were comfortable enough."

Troubles Began Sunday Night. "We found after dark Sunday night that we were off the Long Island coast and heading east by north. The wind began to come out of the north and started our troubles."

"We held a council Sunday night at 9 o'clock. The airship was trying to break up things before the council was finished. The wind was beginning to pitch us around and we were losing headway and drifting offshore toward the south. That's when we started to throw the gasoline overboard to keep from hitting the wave crests."

It was during the long drift on Sunday night and Monday morning, Irwin said, that Europe as an objective point was decided to be out of the question, because of the compulsory loss of fuel.

Changed Their Plans. "So we decided to head for the Azores," Irwin resumed. "But we had drifted some more just after we decided on the Azores, so we changed our plans again to try for the Bermudas."

The airship's bounciness began to look more and more dangerous to Wellman and the crew as the dusk came, eastward over the waves on Monday evening. The bag was sagging lower and lower, and once during the night the airship slipped some foam fringe off the crest of a comb.

The crew were hoping now that some stray streamer would twinkie above the horizon and the Trent was sighted. After considerable trouble the crew was taken off.

Nothing could gratify a reporter more in the eyes of the managing editor.

Man is Jack Wright, a newspaperman. He is a warm friend of "Foxy" Peyton, who owns the paper, and when he gets a Wall Street tip, Wright goes to his chief for money, promising as security, in the event of failure, his pledge to turn into the paper one of the biggest stories New York has ever known. As the tip falls, Wright is compelled to make good. This he does by offering himself as the prize in a lottery which is to be conducted by the newspaper. Naturally the coupon appeal mostly to women and the campaign among the thousands of contestants wages war. Shortly after Jack has offered himself as the human prize, he falls in love with Helen Meyer, which fact causes him to deeply regret his entry into such a foolish scheme.

An unexpected turn of affairs takes place when the lucky coupon is won by the old maid companion to Mrs. Peyton. The maiden lady being very much as she thinks, in need of a husband, eagerly holds on to the lucky number, only giving it up under the most extraordinary circumstances.

This in main is the thread of the delightful story that Rida Johnson Young, author of "Brown of Harvard," by the way, has woven in "The Lottery Man," which after its long run at the Blum theatre, New York, comes here with a capital company.

"Alias Jimmy Valentine." There is a safe opening scene in "Alias Jimmy Valentine," the new Paul Armstrong play which comes to the Soisson theatre, Oct. 27, which has been declared by detectives to be the most natural exposition of the "Peterson's" art ever shown outside of an actual bank burglary. Jimmy Valentine opens a vault by the mere wave of a touch, which, according to the police authorities, was the accomplishment of a real "Jimmy Valentine," from whom Mr. Armstrong's character takes his name. The play has been running two years in New York.

French Method of Developing the Bust

Madame DuBarrie Explains How the Bust May Be Developed 2 to 8 Inches in 30 Days.

"I am explaining for the first time to the ladies of America," says Madame DuBarrie, "the French method of developing the bust. It is much more effective, the results appear much more quickly, the breasts become more firm, plump and symmetrical, the method is more simple, the effects are lasting, and altogether beyond comparison with the results produced here."

"You know the French people have the development of the bust and form down to a fine point."

"By this French method, the breasts may be developed from 2 to 8 inches in 30 days. This applies to women of almost any age, from young girls to elderly matrons, whether the bust is absolutely not developed at all, or has grown weak and flabby, and hangs no matter from what cause."

"I will only be too glad to tell any woman who is interested what this simple French method is. If she will enclose a 2 cent stamp to repay the postage, I will send an illustrated booklet in a plain sealed wrapper that will explain it all."

We suggest to our lady readers that they write to Madame DuBarrie for particulars of this remarkable French method, enclose 2 cents in stamps for the illustrated booklet and address it to Madame DuBarrie, Suite 2081, Quinlan Building, Chicago, Ill.

WHEN A MAN MARRIES

BY MARY ROBERTS RINEHART
AUTHOR OF "THE CIRCULAR STAIRCASE"
"THE MAN IN LOWER TEN," ETC.

"I'm not fond of," he explained, straightening and throwing out his chest, "but—well, you don't look like the part, Anne. You're—you are growing matronly, not just what you were all right. And then I'd forget and call you 'mammy,' which would require explanation. I think it's up to you, Kit."

"I shall do nothing of the sort!" I snarled. "It's ridiculous!"

"I dare you!" said Dallas.

I refused. I stood like a rock while the storm surged around me and beat over me. I must say for Jim that he was merely pathetic. He said that my happiness was first; that he would not give me an uncomfortable minute for anything on earth; and that Bella had been perfectly right to leave him, because he was a sinking ship, and deserved to be turned out pointlessly into the world. After which mixed figure, he poured himself something to drink, and his hands were shaking.

Dal and Anne stood on each side of him and patted him on the shoulders, and glared across at me. I felt that if I was a rock, Jim's ship had struck on me and was sinking, as he said, because of me. I began to crumble.

"What—what time does she leave?" I asked, warbling.

"Ten: nine: Kk, are you going to do it?"

"No!" I gave a last clutch at my resolution. "People who do that kind of thing always get into trouble. She might miss her train. She's almost certain to miss her train!"

"You're temperamental," Dallas said. "You're not let her miss her train; you can be sure of that."

"Jim," Anne broke in suddenly, "hasn't she a pleasure of Bella. There's not the faintest resemblance between Bella and Kit."

Jim became downcast again. "I sent her a miniature of Bella a couple of years ago," he said despondently. "Did it?"

"But Dal said he remembered the miniature, and it looked more like me than Bella, anyhow. So we were just where we started. And down inside of me I had a premonition that I was going to do just what they wanted me to do, and get into all sorts of trouble, and not be thanked for it after all. Which was entirely correct. And then Bella Mercer came and banged at the door and said that dinner had been announced ages ago and that every body was waiting. With the hurry and stress, and poor Jim's distracted face, I weakened.

"I feel like a cross between an idiot and a criminal," I said shortly, "and I don't know particularly why every one thinks I should be the victim for the sacrifice. But if you will promise to get her out of here, I'll go, and if you will stand by me and not leave me alone with her, I—I might try it."

"Of course, we'll stand by you!" they said in chorus. "We won't let you stick!" And Dal said, "You're the right sort of girl, Kit. And after it's all over, you'll realize that it's the biggest kind of lark. Think how you are saving the old lady's feelings! When you are an elderly person yourself, Kit, you will appreciate what you are doing tonight."

Yes, they said they would stand by me, and that I was a heroine and the only person there clever enough to act the part, and that they wouldn't let me stick! I am not bitter now, but that is what they promised. Oh, I am not defending myself; I suppose I deserved everything that happened. But they told me that she would be there only between trains, and that she was deaf, and that I had an opportunity to save a fellow-being from ruin. So in the end I capitulated.

When they opened the door into the living room, Max Reed had arrived and was helping to hide a decanter and glasses, and somebody said a cab was at the door.

And that was the way it began.

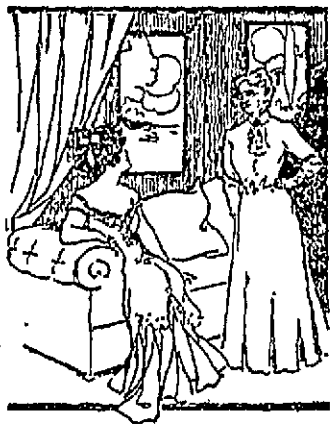

CHAPTER III.

I Might Have Known It. The minute I had consented I regretted it. After all, what was Jim's trouble to me? Why should I help him impose on an unsuspecting elderly woman? And it was only putting off discovery anyhow. Sooner or later, she would learn of the divorce, and—just at that instant my eyes fell on Mr. Harrison—Tom Harrison, as Anne called him. He was looking on with an amused, half-puzzled smile, while people were rushing around him, the roulette wheel and flutes of which Miss Caruthers might disapprove, and Betty Mercer was on her knees wailing up a toy bear that Max had brought her. What would he think? It was evident that he thought badly of us already—that he was contemptuously amused, and then to have to ask him to lend himself to the deception!

With a gasp I hurried myself after Jimmy, only to hear a strange voice to the hall and to know that I was too late. I was in for it, whatever was coming. It was Aunt Bella who was coming—along the hall, followed by Jim, who was wringing his face and trying not to notice the paralyzed silence in the library.

Aunt Bella met me in the doorway. To my frantic eyes she seemed to tower above us by at least a foot, and beside her Jimmy was a red, perspiring cherub.

"Here she is!" Jimmy said, from behind a temporary eclipse of black caught hold of a chair; she stared helplessly from Aunt Bella to the half dollar, and then at me. Anne was trying not to catch my eye.

"And another thing," Aunt Selma said, from the head of the stairs, "I sent those towels over from Ireland. Tell her to wash and bleach the one Mrs. What's her name Brown used as a duster."

Anno was quite crushed as we went down the stairs. I turned once, half way down, and her face was a curious mixture of guilt and hopeless wrath. Over her shoulder I could see Hannah, wide-eyed and puzzled, staring after us.

Jim presented everybody, and then he went into the den and closed the door and we heard him unlock the door. Aunt Selma looked at Lolita's bare shoulders and said she guessed she didn't take cold easily, and conversation rather languished. Max Reed was looking like a thunder cloud, and he came over to me with a lowering expression that I had learned to dread in him.

"What fool nonsense is this?" he demanded. "What in the world possessed you, Kit, to put yourself in such an awkward position? Unless—unless you are going to marry Jim."

I am sorry for Max. He is such a nice boy, and good looking, too, if only he were not so fierce, and did not want to make love to me. No matter what I do, Max always disapproves of it. I have always had a deeply rooted conviction that if I should ever in a weak moment marry Max, he would disapprove of that, too, before I had done it very long.

"Are you?" he demanded, narrowing his eyes—"a sign of unusually bad humor."

"Am I what?"

"Going to marry him?"

"If you mean Jim," I said with dignity, "I haven't asked my mind yet. Besides, he hasn't asked me."

Aunt Selma had been talking woman's suffrage in front of the fireplace, but now she turned to me.

"Is this the case Cousin Jane Whitcomb sent you as a wedding present?" she demanded, indicating a hideous urn-shaped affair on the mantel. It came to me as an inspiration that Jim had once said it was an ancestral urn, so I said without hesitation that it was. And because there was a pause, and every one was looking at us, I added that it was a beautiful thing.

Aunt Selma snarled. "Hideous!" she said. "It looks like Cousin Jane, shape and coloring."

Then she looked at it more closely, pounced on it, turned it upside down and shook it. A card fell out, which Dallas picked up and gave her with a bow. Jim had come out of the den and was dancing wildly around and beckoning to me. By the time I had made out that that was not the vase Cousin Jane had sent us as a wedding present, Aunt Selma had examined the card. Then she glared across at me, and stooping, put the card in the fire. I did not understand at all, but I knew I had in some way done the unforgettable thing. Later, Dal told me it was her card, and that she had sent the vase to him at Christmas, with a generous check inside. When she straightened from the fireplace, it was to a new theme, which she attacked with her usual vigor. The vase incident was over, but she never forgot it. She proved that she never did when she sent me two urn-shaped vases with Paul and Virginia on them, when I—that is, later on.

"The cause in England has made great strides," she announced from the fire place. "Soon the hand that rocks the cradle will be the hand that actually rules the world!" Here she looked at me.

"I'm not up on such things," Max said blandly, having recovered some of his good humor, "but— isn't it usually a foot that rocks the cradle?"

Aunt Selma turned on him and Mr. Harrison, who were standing together, with a snort.

"What have you, or you, ever done for the independence of woman?" she demanded.

Mr. Harrison smiled. He had been looking rather gloomy until then. "We have at least remained unmarried," he retorted. And then dinner was again announced.

He was to take me out, and he came across the room to where I sat collapsed in a chair, and bent over me.

"Do you know," he said, looking down at me with his clear, disconcerting gaze, "do you know that I have just grasped the situation? There was such a noise that I did not hear your name, and I am only realizing now that you are my hostess? I don't know why I got the impression that this was a bachelor establishment, but I did. Odd, wasn't it?"

I positively couldn't look away from him. My features seemed frozen, and my eyes were glued to his. As he was telling him the truth—well, my tongue refused to move. I intended to tell him during dinner if I had an opportunity; I honestly did. But the more I looked at him and saw how candid his eyes were, and how stern his mouth might be, the more I shivered at the plunge. And, of course, as everybody knows now, I didn't tell him at all. And every moment I expected that awful old woman to ask me what I paid my cook, and when I had changed the color of my hair—Bella's being black.

Dinner was a half hour late when we finally went out, Jimmy leading off with Aunt Selma, and I, as hostess, trailing behind the procession with Mr. Harrison. Dallas took in the two Mercer girls, for we were one man short, and Max took Anna. Lolita Mercer was so excited that she wriggled, and as for me, the candles and the orchids—everything—danced around in a circle, and I just seemed to catch the back of my chair as it flew past. Jim had ordered away the wines and brought out some weak and cheap Chianti. Dallas looked gloomy at the change, but Jim explained in an undertone that Aunt Selma didn't approve of expensive vintages. Naturally, the meal was glum enough.

Aunt Selma had had her dinner on the train, so she spent her time in asking me questions the length of the table, and in getting acquainted with me. She had brought a bottle of some sort of medicinal wine with her, and she took a clear glassful, while she talked. The stuff was called Pommery. Shall I ever forget it?

It was Mr. Harrison who first noticed Lolita. Jimmy's Jap had been the only thing in the menage; that Bella declared she had hated to leave. But he was doing the strangest things. His little black eyes shifted nervously, and he looked queer.

"What's wrong with him?" Mr. Harrison asked me finally, when he saw that I noticed "he he he!"

"Then Aunt Selma's voice from the other end of the table: 'Bella,' she called, in a high shrill tone, 'do you let James eat cucumbers?'"

"I think he must be," I said hurriedly to Mr. Harrison. "See how his hands shake when he eats them! But Aunt Selma would not be bothered."

"Cucumbers and strawberries," she repeated impressively. "I was saying, Bella, that cucumbers have always given James the most fearful indigestion. And yet I see you serve them at your table. Do you remember what I wrote you to give him when he has his dreadful spells?"

I was quite speechless; every one was looking, and no one could help. It was clear Jim was racking his brain, and we sat staring despondently at each other across the candles. Everything I had ever known faded from me; eight pairs of eyes bored into me. Mr. Harrison's politely amused.

"I don't remember," I said at last. "Really, I don't believe—" Aunt Selma smiled in a superior way.

"Now, don't you recall it?" she insisted. "I said: 'Baking soda in water taken internally for cucumber! Baking soda in water externally, rubbed on, when he gets that dreadful, itching strawberry rash.'"

I believe the dinner went on. Some body asked Aunt Selma how much overcharge she had paid in foreign hotels, and after that she was as harmless as a dove.

Then half-way through the dinner we heard a crash in "Takahiro's" parlor, and when it did not appear again, Jim got up and went out to investigate. He was gone quite a little while, and when he came back he looked worried.

"Bella," he replied to our inquiring glances. "One of the maids will come in. They have sent for a doctor."

Aunt Selma was for going out at once and "fixing him up," as she put it, but Dallas gently interposed.

"I wouldn't, Miss Caruthers," he said, in the deferential manner he had adopted toward her. "You don't know what it may be. He's been looking pretty badly all evening."

"It might be scarlet fever," Max broke in cheerfully. "I say, scarlet fever on the face—horrible—what a doctor would be, Jimmy? What do you lot and red make? Green?"

"Orange," Jim said shortly. "I wish you people would remember that we are trying to eat."

The fact was, however, that no one was really eating, except Mr. Harrison, who had given up trying to understand us, considering no doubt, our subdued excitement as our normal condition. Ages afterward I learned that he thought my face almost tragic that night, and that he supposed, from the way I glared across the table, that I had quarreled with my husband.

"I am afraid you are not well," he said at last, polishing my food untouched on my plate. We should not have come, any of us."

"I am perfectly well," I replied verily. "I am never ill—I eat a late luncheon."

He glanced at me keenly. "Don't let them stir any play bridge to night," he urged. "Miss Caruthers can be an evasive, can she not? And you are really tired. You look it."

"I think I'm only ill humor," I said, looking directly at him. "I am angry at myself. I have done something silly, and I hate to be silly."

Max would have said "Impossible," or something else like that. The Harrison man looked at me with interested, serious eyes.

"Is it too late to undo it?" he asked. And then, after I determined that he should never know the truth, he could go back to South America and build bridges and make love to the Spanish girls (for are they Spanish down there?) and think of me always as a married woman, married to a distant artist, inclined to be stout—the artist, not I—and with an Aunt Selma Caruthers who made butious and believed in the Cause. But never, never should he think of me as a silly little fool who pretended that she was the other man's wife and had a lump in her throat because when he really, in his own mind, came along, a man who knew something more than polo and motors, she had to carry on the deception to keep his respect, and be sedate and matronly, and see him change from perfectly open admiration at first to a hands-off she is my host's-wife attitude at last.

"It can never be undone," I said solemnly.

Well, that's the picture as nearly as I can draw it; a round table with a low centerpiece of orchids in lavender and pink, old silver candlesticks with filigree shades against the somber wallpapering, nine people, two of them unhappy—Jim and I; one of them complacent—Aunt Selma; one puzzled—Mr. Harrison; and the rest hysterically nervous. Add one sick Japanese butler and gridd in the mills of the gods.
